

Final Report

Foreword

I am pleased to share with you the final report of the Distinguishing UCT Campaign. The campaign was launched by my predecessor, Dr Max Price, and concluded under my tenure. I want to acknowledge Dr Price's role in the campaign and the many other contributions he made.

I would also like to acknowledge the crucial role that Dr Russell Ally, Executive Director at the Development and Alumni Department, played not only in conceptualising the campaign, but also in securing the first large donations to the campaign. A thank you is also extended to the head of the campaign, Mr Sidney van Heerden and the rest of the DAD staff for all their dedication and hard work to ensure the success of the campaign.

It is my honor to formally close out the campaign and to thank all our alumni, friends, donors and many others who made this campaign such an incredible success. You will read in the report about the purpose of the campaign, campaign activities, campaign outcomes and who the donors were to the campaign. In the report you will read about extraordinary generosity, steadfast loyalty to the university, commitment to the vision of the university and multiple other acts of goodwill.

I am proud of how our alumni responded to our call for them to support their alma mater. I am humbled by the tremendous goodwill shown to the university by friends, foundations and corporates.

Through these multiple acts of generosity, the university is in a much better place.

I am writing this to you during a time when our country and the world is facing one of the greatest challenges of our lifetimes – COVID-19. The need for a robust endowment has never been more demonstrated. I again therefore want to thank you for strengthening our endowment and want to urge you to continue to support the university during this difficult period.

Purpose of the campaign

The goal of the Distinguishing UCT (DUCT) campaign (2015 - 2019) was to grow the University of Cape Town's (UCT) unrestricted endowment to One Billion South African Rand (ZAR) by the end of 2019. The university publicly launched the campaign late in 2014 in the United Kingdom with the significant support of our UCT UK Trust to ensure that the campaign would have a global presence and receive a significant initial financial injection.

Two milestones in the university's history formed the background to the DUCT. The first was the 2018 celebration of UCT's centenary as a dedicated degree-issuing university. The second was the marking, in 2019, of the institution's 190th birthday since its founding as the South African College. The income generated through the strengthening of the unrestricted endowment was to be utilized for strategic initiatives – under the broad pillars of the campaign Advancing Excellence, Investing in Talent and Realising Transformation. The campaign was also leveraged to secure direct funding for specific strategic initiatives, such as a new Clinical Neuroscience's Centre, the Nelson Mandela Project and other key institutional priorities.

Campaign Activities

One-on-one meetings, small and large events promoting the DUCT campaign were hosted worldwide and consistently throughout the entire campaign period. These events were launched by the previous Vice-Chancellor, Dr Max Price, and concluded by Prof Mamokgethi Phakeng, the current Vice-Chancellor. Their personal commitment ensured the success of the campaign, particularly in the United Kingdom and in South Africa.

Meetings and events were arranged in most of the leading international centres where the university has a notable alumni presence, and naturally throughout South Africa to ensure significant local alumni support. In South Africa many campaign activities were generously supported by corporate SA who sponsored several events.

Campaign Outcomes

The campaign coincided with some turbulent times in the South African tertiary and economic environments, which included the activities of various #MustFall movements. These events caused serious disruptions for the university's work.

The emotional debate surrounding a possible boycott of Israeli academic institutions during 2018/19 did not assist either. All of the above developments made it very challenging to raise money specifically for the unrestricted endowment - in particular the urgent need to financially support our 'missing-middle' cohort of students.

Nevertheless, by the end of the campaign a significant number of 1246 donors had given their support - a total of 10,187 individual donation transactions had been administered - and ZAR 98.3 million had been receipted directly into the unrestricted endowment fund, thereby increasing its overall value from ZAR 500 million in 2015 to around ZAR 676 million in 2019 (*See Table 1). Note: These amounts exclude a number of longer-term pledges - the biggest being a ZAR 10 million pledge (over five years) from the Oppenheimer Generations Foundation [Johathan and Jennifer Oppenheimer and family], of which a further ZAR 2 million per annum will still be paid over to UCT in the years 2020, 2021 and 2022.

Under the broader 'banner' of the campaign in excess of ZAR 140 million was raised from numerous individuals, corporates, foundations and trusts for priority capital and infrastructure projects at UCT, mostly notably the building project for the Clinical Neuroscience's Centre (formally launched on 10 March 2020) and the Nelson Mandela Project. These donations bring the overall amount raised via the campaign to around ZAR 238 million.

The most significant donations to the DUCT campaign came from the United Kingdom where 181 donors contributed ZAR 53 million, and from South Africa where 736 donors contributed ZAR 40 million (See Table 2). The university's sincere appreciation must go to the trustees of the UK Trust and in particular to Mr Richard Gnodde who not only motivated alumni and donors to support the campaign but also lead by example by personally contributing significantly to the campaign.

A plaque acknowledging all donors to the campaign is being placed in the offices of the Development and Alumni Department (DAD); some of the larger donors to the campaign have also been acknowledged by being awarded UCT donor pins, whilst a number of donors - who have made significant donations (but have also made some other major contributions to the university's work) - have been acknowledged with the university's prestigious Vice-Chancellor's medal.

Reflections

While we were not able to add a further ZAR 500 000 to the endowment to reach our ZAR 1 billion target as we hoped for, we are still exceedingly grateful to our alumni and broader donor community for their most generous contributions to the campaign. These cash reserves will allow us to support a critical range of areas at the university, such as bursaries and scholarships, student health, financial aid, infrastructure and strategic projects.

In 2019 UCT again invested around ZAR 150 million in bursaries and scholarships for needy and deserving students – both at undergraduate and postgraduate areas. This would not have been possible without the returns on the unrestricted endowment, which remains an important source of additional funding in an environment of state budget cuts and declining student fee income. ZAR 28.3 million was released from the unrestricted endowment specifically – this is computed at 4% real.

The campaign greatly assisted in making the university financially more stable by significantly strengthening the undesignated endowment.
